CHTAURA, Lebanon — Oppo-nents of President Amin Gemayel met here Tuesday to create a National Unity Front, aimed at reforming the Lebanese political system as a condition for ending the country's 10-year civil war.

The main aim of the coalition, which brings together the most powerful Moslem militias, is to end the Christians' dominance of government and to rewrite the constitution to give Moslems an equal share of political power.

Moslems now make up about 55 percent of the nation's four million people, but the apportionment of power continues to reflect an earlier time when Christians were in the majority.

In a declaration, they called for increased resistance against Israel to "liquidate the enemy's direct and indirect presence" in the south.

The reference to "indirect presence" evidently meant that the South Lebanon Army, the predominantly Christian militia that serves as an Israeli surrogate army in a security belt established by Israel.

Mr. Jumblat drove to the meeting escorted by a jeepload of guards. Mr. Berri was flanked by 40 Amal security men when he arrived. The Druze leader was quoted Monday as proposing that the presidency be intated among Lebanon's six major religious sects -Maronite Christians, Greek Orthodox. U.S. Ordered To Penalize Japanese on Whale Quota appeals court ruled Tuesday that the United States must impose sanctions against Japan for violating international whaling quotas.

WASHINGTON — A federal

A three-judge panel of the Cir-cuit Court of Appeals for the Dis-trict of Commbia, rejecting arguments of the administration, said that Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige was required by law to impose the penalties.

Mr. Baldrige had asked the court to exempt Japan from the sanctions, which would haive Japan's fishing quotas in U.S. territorial waters at a cost to Japan of about $462 million a year.

In March, the two nations announced a pact that would have allowed Japan to kill up to 1,200 sperm whales without facing sanctions, in exchange for ending all commercial whaling in 1988. The International Whaling Commission, of which Japan is a member, has voted to end commercial whaling by 1986.

Writing for a 2-1 majority, Judge Skelly Wright said, "Where a foreign nation allows its nationals to fish in excess of recommendations set forth by an international fishery conservation program, it has per se diminished the effectiveness of that

In such cases, the judge said, the imposition of sanctions "is mandatory and nondiscretionary."

The ruling was a victory for Greenpeace and other conservation organizations, which filed suit against the U.S. government in 1984 requesting that Mr. Baldrige be ordered to certify Japan as a nation that had violated anti-whal-

Cabinet Post for Human Rights Critic Seen as Move to Build Uganda's Image

By Sheila Rule New York Times Service KAMPALA, Uganda - The appointment of Paul Ssemogerere as minister of internal affairs has been viewed by some commentators here as an attempt by the new govern-

There is no fixed lease between China and Portugal for Macao such as the one under which the British will govern Hong Kong un-til 1997. The Portuguese settled Macao peacefully in the mid-16th century and have stayed on, more or less at the sufferance of the Chioese, ever since.

Now that China has signaled that it wants Macao back, there are many who say they believe that the unist government will seek to reassure Hong Kong of its ability to run a place that is radically differ-

Arab Summit Beginning in Morocco

CASABLANCA, Morocco (Reuters) - Arab leaders began arriving here Tuesday for the first Arab summit in nearly three years, but many heads of state will be absent.

Iraq, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and some other Gulf states will not have top-level representation at the summit, which is to begin Wednesday. The meeting is being boyconed by Syria, Algeria, South Yemen and Lebanon. Arab diplomatic sources said that the Gulf war, the possible return of Egypt to the 21-member Arab League and the Jordanian-Palestinian accord signed in Amman, Jordan, in February would be discussed. But they said that no breakthroughs were likely, particularly without top level

Gauging the Psychological Fallout of Hiroshima

NEW YORK - Scarcely had the atomic bomb been dropped on Hiroshima than Americans began to ponder its lasting effects: Would the event sear the national psyche and significantly change their lives? The issue remains as unsettled.

and unsettling, today as the issue of whether the bomb should have been dropped 40 years ago. A prominent exponent of the view that the atomic bomb has transformed American life is Robert J. Lifton, a professor of psychiaby and psychology at John Jay College of the City University of New York, who has made studies of the survivors of Hiroshima.

Mr. Lifton contends that the bomb has undermined man's sense of immortality, as expressed in the family, work and faith. He discerns the influence of this "sense of radical futurelessness" in such things as increased divorce, "significant im-pairment of the parent-child hond," and the recent growth of religious fundamentalism.

A critic of the Reagan administration's arms policies, he hails the "worldwide struggle to get rid of the weapon," and has been criticized for what a fellow psychiatrist, Dr. Seymour C. Post, of Columbia University's College of Physicians and Surgeons, calls "his politically motivated activity."

The views of Dr. Lifton and others who believe that the bomb has had profound effects on American life appear frequently in The Bulletin of Atomic Scientists, an influential magazine established almost 40 years ago by scientists who worked on the bomb.

NORFOLK, Virginia — Arthur

J. Walker has told federal investigators that he was recruited as a spy by his younger brother in 1980, while despondent over the failure of a car radio business, according to statements unscaled here. The statements were made pubhe Monday by order of a judge as Mr. Walker went on trial on

Arthur Walker says his brother kept maps hidden in a wall in his home to guide him to clandestine meetings with Soviet operatives. He told investigators that his younger brother began his activity as a spy by driving to the Soviet Embassy in Washington and park-ing out front for several days to attract attention so the embassy would contact him. It did. In statements to the Federal Rureau of Investigation, Arthur Walker said that John Walker had once used his mother as a courier of payments made in Europe by Soviet agents. John, he said, "strapped a money belt on hex," when they

The two brothers talked over the situation and John Walker said: "I have friends who will pay for classified information." Arthur Walker, saying he had suspected since 1975 that his brother had an illicit source of income, said he understood instantly. He replied: "Now I know where you get your bucks." As the two men sat in John's pickup truck outside a restamant, Arthur recalled, John "bragged about the money." John Walker urged his brother to get a job where he would have "access to classified information." A month later, Arthur said, he took a iob as an engineer at VSE Corp., a military contractor in Chesapeake,

More swiftly than anyone foresaw, South Africa's choices are being narrowed. The country's white rulers seem incapable even of a gesture of conciliation to nonviolent blacks such as Bishop Desmond Tutu, and this has the effect of encouraging civil, if not revolutionary, disobedience. Though isolated as never before and the target of multiplying sanctions, South Africa's leaders no doubt have the power to put down this summer's defiance. But they seem to be condemning their country to a cycle of repression and recession.

To a degree, South Africa's economy is sanction-proof. Its resources and economic reserves are sufficient to weather most shortterm calamities, even the strike now threatened by the union of black mine workers. Most whites live comfortably by Western standards, luxuriously by Africa's; a bottle of scotch is still $6. South Africa is well prepared for foreign retribution; it can get by with its own energy and weapons.

Yet the future must look bleak in Pretoria these days. President Pieter W. Botha's twoweek-old state of emergency for many black areas has failed to restore order. And in the unsentimental verdict of money men, the country's future is uncertain. In a fortnight, the value of South African gold stocks has plunged by one-fifth. This follows a two-year worldwide decline, from $460 to about $325 an ounce, in a commodity that provides half the country's foreign exchange.

The emergency has dramatized a parallel decline in the dollar value of South Africa's currency. One day last week, on the mere report that a major American bank would no longer lend to South Africans, the rand dipped by 6 cents, or 12 percent. The bank turned out to be Chase Manhattan, and its largely symbolic action is sure to be followed by others.

Often enough, Pretoria has been able to shrug off market fluctuations, diplomatic os-tracism and domestic turmoil. Its hard-boiled calculation has been that the world's desire for gold would always outweigh scruple and leave its corner of Africa safe (or apartheid. But the application of sanctions abroad and the agitation of black unions at home suggest that the regime cannot count indefinitely on buying its way out of trouble.

Underscoring that message is certainly the intent of the U.S. Congress, which seems likely to vote for at least mild sanctions this fall. Even President Reagan, who has wanted to appear as Pretoria's friend, has hinted that he may sign such a measure. Though the president perceives more positive reform in South Africa than do most observers, he sees the need for "fluctuations" of tone, as he put it

Monday, in pressing for an end to apartheid. Incredibly, in these circumstances, Mr. Bo-tha cannot bring himself to meet with Bishop Turn or other black moderates whose influence over younger blacks is fast fading. Having falsely branded the bishop an extremist, Mr. Botha is trapped by his own propaganda and unable to justify political negotiation with blacks to his more extreme white followers. Looking back upon this summer, the Afrikaners may one day wish they could recapture the moment when blacks still stood ready to engage them in nonviolent bargaining.

Give Hiroshima Meaning

Stand by for more anniversary journalism. Tuesday marked 40 years since the atomic bomb was exploded over Hiroshima, and the anniversary compelled an explosion of commentary; the Nagasaki anniversary is Friday. Do not misunderstand us. It is not the commemoration to which we object, but rather the fitful, artificial quality of it. This year has been one public-issue anniversary after another. All feel duty-bound to acknowledge these remem-brances. But does the sudden festival of commentary do justice to the size of the event? Does it show that we have been usefully instructed and chastened by that event, or merely that we have learned how to talk about it?

There is a sense in which one could say the whole world has been properly instructed and chastened: Those countries that have nuclear weapons or have the capacity for quickly assembling and using them have, for the most part, proceeded warily in areas where conflict might quickly engage muclear weapons. No nuclear weapon has been used, except in tests, since World War II. One theme of this anniversary has been that governments and peo-ples around the world are not sufficiently concerned about these weapons. But this, seems to us to be false. Concern - auxiety is all but universal, extending, though some self-righteous critics find it impossible to believe, to the very governing circles that are responsible for these weapons. From the day the first bomb was used, people have under-stood what was unleashed, the magnitude of it and the consequent reason for fear.

What has been missing has not been con-cern. What has been missing has been resolve, ration, ingenuity and restraint. This is what makes these birthday bursts of attention so troubling: They are by their nature fleeting,

Thousands of these weapons of devastation have been deployed, principally by the Soviet Union and the United States. The time it would take them to reach their intercontinental destinations is calculated in minutes, not hours. The command and control structures governing their use are necessarily elaborate, and in many respects outmoded and frail. All this is in the background of a ferocious and legitimate political conflict between the United States and the Soviet Union, and it is in the wings where other mutually hostile countries are concerned as they pursue their efforts to get the bomb. Nuclear issues come and go. Demystifying Islamic Fundamentalism

WEST POINT, New York - In the aftermath of the Beirut hostage crisis, many in Washington are searching frantically for a U.S. policy toward Islamic fundamentalism. This is a foolish search for a policy that is not needed.

Spurred by the need to render complex events comprehensible, many scholars and policy-makers have grossly simplified Islamic fundamentalism. Relying on demonology rather than analysis, such people frequently assume that the fundamentalists' raison d'être is fighting the United States. At best, the Islamic movement is approached as yet another mysterious product of the inscrutable East. Neither approach will help in understanding or dealing with fundamental-ism. The fact is that it is a rather familiar kind of political phenomenon, far less difficult to grasp than is sometimes assumed.

Although fundamentalism is widely varied, many of the Islamic movements share common traits. The most important of these is a deeply felt sense of distranchisement.

Few Middle Eastern states offer their citizens an effective voice in government. Political participation — in the form of plebiscites or elections is often more show than substance, and politi-cal representation is generally rigged to benefit the representatives rather than the represented. So Islamic movements offer a crucial channel for participation. In states where the secret-police budget often rivals the public-health budget, the By Augustus R. Norton mosque is often the only place where one can meet without unwanted observers.

Islam has not been rediscovered; it was never "lost." It has, however, been reappropriated for a new purpose. For many Moslems, it has a renewed appeal as a familiar and culturally authentic idiom of protest and political action. And unlike communism, liberalism and socialism, Islam is untainted by recent failure or by association with the West. Islamic politics are just that - politics. And like any political stirring, Islam is subject to exploitation and manipulation, in this case by cieries and former army officers.

What this means is that many of the Islamic what this means is that many of the Islamic movements can be surprisingly pragmatic in their political maneuverings. In Egypt, for example, in the general elections in May 1984, the Islamic Brotherhood joined in an electoral coalition with the New Wald Party, the political descendant of a traditional bitter rival. The opposition of a traditional bitter rival. ponents of President Hafez al-Assad of Syria also clothe themselves in Islamic rhetoric, but also clothe themselves in Islamic thetoric, but when we peel away the spiritual language, we discover an essentially political complaint — that the Sumi Moslems of Syria, the majority of the population, do not wield the political power warranted by their numbers.

There is no denying that the Islamic movements include permanent enemies of the United States —enemies whose demands causes be met and whose enmity will not be mitigated whatever America does or fails to do. Such organizations need an enemy in order to mobilize support: It is easier to blame America than to take responsibility oneself. The Hezballah organization of Lebaity oneself. The Hezballan organization of heben non, for instance, asserts: "America is behind all our catastrophes." With such viscerally anti-fordialogue, but not all fundamentalists are anti-American or pro-terrorist.

To be sure, many Moslems, fundamentalist or not, object to some aspects of U.S. policy in the Middle East. But objecting to policy and agitating violently against it are very different things, and the small cells of fanatical terrorists who have forced their way to our attention in recent years are hardly representative.

Fundamentalism is not a monolithic body of fanatical extremists whose idea of a good time is killing Americans and humiliating the U.S. gov-ernment. The notion that such behavior is somehow typical is a bigoted idea that can only obstruct efforts to come to terms with an important new political movement.

How Hanoi Is Using The Missing

By Stanley Karnow

TOKYO — Few issues arouse emotions in the United States as much as the question of the American soldiers missing in action in Vietnam. The subject, in a canious way, is now taking on diplomatic importance.
For years, the Reagan administra-tion has been accessing Vietnam's Generalist leaders of failing to co-oberate sufficiently in delivering the remains of the missing. The com-plaint has been largely justified. The Vietnamese seem to have been playing games with the issue, with-holding information on dead Americans in eachange for some form of U.S. recognition, which they want to offset their conflict with China. Viennamese intransigence served the Reagan administration, since it Sent Tent

What the Vietnamese clearly are trying to do is to get the United States to establish a permanent investigat-ing mission in Hanoi that could, for Vietnamese purposes, be called an informal U.S. diplomatic entity.

The Vietnamese are evidently moving in this direction as they perceive that the new Soviet leadership head-ed by Mikhail Gorbachev is striving to repair its differences with China. The Russians, meanwhile, have been giving Vietnam a backsea For a decade, the Soviet Union has been Vietnam's only supporter in its conflict with China. A rapprocisement between the Communist s would isolate the Vietnamese. This is why they are attempting to improve ties with the United States. President Reagan cannot easily spurn Vietnam's initiatives without appearing to transgress his repeated promises to obtain all possible infor-mation on the fate of the nearly 2,500 Americans missing in Indochina. So what essentially is a humanitarian issue is giving the Victnamese the wedge they had sought to create the impression they are normalizing their links with the United States. It would be premature, of course, to expect a quick improvement in U.S.-Vietnamese relations. Still outing is the matter of the Vietnamese occupation of Cambodia.

One of the U.S. conditions for recognition of Vietnam - or even a discussion of the possibility — has been the withdrawal of the Vietnamese forces from Cambodia. In the present climate, though, a deal of some sort cannot be excluded. The Indonesian foreign minister, Mochtar Kusumaatmatija, has been trying to act in an intermediary role between the United States and Viet-nam. He believes that progress on the MIA issue could spur movement on the Cambodian question.

But his views are not entirely shared by the other nations of Southcast Asia. Thailand, which maintains close connections with China is skeptical about negotiations with the Vietnamese. The United States cannot approach Vietnam until a measure of unity has been achieved among the Southeast Asian nations toward Vietnam.

Apartheid: U.S. Draws A Fine Line

By Flora Lewis

PARIS — Whatever America's moral involvement in South Africa, the Reagan administration's declared policy of "constructive en-gagement" amounts to political involvement beyond previous com-miments by the United States.

The rationale is that gentle persuasion can be the most effective way for the United States to push the South African regime away from apartheid. There is something to the argument that sanctions would burt South African blacks and surrounding states more than they would pro-apartheid whites, and that they would serve to stiffen Afrikaner intransigence.

But the simation is getting worse, not better. And the official American attitude is an increasingly important factor. Therefore, hard as it is to agree on specific measures that have a chance of producing even marginal results. Washington needs to provide a coherent explanation.

There has been no shortage of clear, sharp denunciations of apartheid from Washington. No responsible administration figure has apologized for the racist system that denies all political and most civic rights to a majority of its population.

The chasm opens with the next, inevitable question. Why protect Pictoria? It was put quite directly to Michael Armacost, the undersecretary of state for political affairs, by Australian reporters in a recent U.S. sponsored interview by satellite.

"Nicaragua is a country whose government you do not like and revolution," they said to Mr. Armacost. "South Africa is a country whose system of government, and notably apartheid, you don't like, and An internal memo instructs writers It said: "However wicked apart-you also deplore its exporting of its and speakers mentioning South Afritroops across its border, not to men-tion its illegal occupation of Namibia. In one case you have imposed sanctions, in the other you are speaking of constructive engagement. Why the double standard?"

Mr. Armacost ducked, mumbling about U.S. interest in negotiations with both countries. Besides, he said, Nicaragua is a small country where sanctions can cause real "dislocation"; they would not make a significant difference to South Africa.

But the State Department knows. that it is not just distant allies that are having trouble fitting this lame waffle into the administration's proclaimed crusade for democracy.

It is also a problem for Radio Free Europe, the congressionally funded station that broadcasts American ca "to bring out two key points."

The first takes the high road:

"Any system founded on inequality before the law and the willful violation of basic human rights is abhor-rent to us. This is true regardless of the political coloring of the oppressive regime, and regardless of the criteria upon which the discrimina-tory practices rest, be they race, reliion, class, ethnic origin or whatever. Such shaky foundations undermine the security of the entire polity, as the South African leadership will sooner or later have to recognize."

That is indeed America's message Communist-controlled Eastern Europe, presumably to the whole world. But the second point pulls way back. It attempts to make a moral distinction that goes beyond even the heid may be, South Africa, unlike the U.S.S.R., does not constitute a men-ace to the Free World, and its system does not require aggression against foreign committees to assure its surviv-al. Pretoria has intervened in neighboring states to remove threats to its own borders, but it has not tried to export apartheid." The note says this explains same-tions against Nicaragna and not South Africa. It adds: "A similar contrast illustrates the reasons behind American policy toward Cuba and Vietnam, on the one hand, and Chile and Paragnay on the other."

This is the answer Mr. Armacost knew better than to give in public.
This abject excuse is drapping America into sharing the blame before world opinion for South Africa's beliavior. If Washington cannot manage anything more reseful, it should at least seek consistency and try to limit the damage that the mounting crisis will do to the nation's standing.

In a Peaceful America, More Room for Differences

I think that the South African regime needs to have a country as powerful as the United States breathing, literally, down its neck. I don't think that you are going to change it by remote control, and I think that if you are W peace is less tolerant of govern-ment intervention than a nation at war, so also is it more tolerant of diversity in its own ranks. A nation at war is, literally, in uniform. It stresses the things that bind it together. It necessarily celebrates its unity and homogeneity. The America at peace in the 1980s does quite the opposite. The conformity that so many ob-servers noticed about the United States of the 1950s has not always been a feature of American history, which is full of cantankerousness, eccentricity and variety. It was an artifact of the shared experiences of depression and war, which made Americans want to be more alike.

There were still divisions — regional, economic, ethnic and racial — but, as the years went on, those divisions tended to blur. The end of racial segregation made the regions more alike; the decline of discrimination in daily life and the ongoing march of the generations submerged many ethnic and racial differences, and the nising tide of affinence put the very large majority of Americans into an economic class that only a few enjoyed in the Roosevelt years.

Yet at the same time, these increases in affluence and toleration were tending to promote greater cultural variety: Americans could afford to choose their own identity.

So increasingly American politics come to be based on cultural variety. Politicians, particularly Democrats who still think their party has a "natural majority," want elections decided on New Deal economic issues and along the old ethnic and regional lines. But for most Americans the unsettled issues of cultural values and ways of life - from school prayer to homosexual rights — are more important and pressing than the mostly settled issues of economic policy and ethnic division.

Those issues do not cut in only one direction. The Democrats expected to be big winners in 1984 off the series of cultural issues they summed up in the phrase "gender gap." Yet it was the Republicans who made large gains among two culturally defined that voters under 30 in the early segments of the electorate. Those who thought the gender gap would swing the 1984 election to the Democrats made their mistake by ig-noring the overall context and the possibility of backlash. The kind of feminism associated with gender-gap enthusiasts did in fact create its own backlash, skillfully exploited by the Reagan strategists who targeted certain types of women as well as men who were turned off by it.

To the extent that gender-gap en-thusiasts were protesting things as they were, they had to light the strong optimistic trend of opinion that was the decisive undercurrent in 1984.

Working in tandem with the surge of optimism, in contrast, were two manticipated cultural trends that boosted Ronald Reagan. The first was the strong Republican trend among voters under 30. The Democrats, who supposed that voters under 30 in the early

Mr. Fabrus's decision provoked a local sense of betrayal and re-newed a national debate. The few remaining steelworkers have been marching in the streets carrying signs saying "Hands off our fac-tory." Some demonstrators once set up a burning barricade across the railroad tracks.

In late July, the four Socialist members of Trith-St.-Leger's municipal council resigned from the party to protest the government's decision to close the steel plant. Their move was an unusual one and received much press coverage.

Mr. Mauroy, who was replaced by Mr. Fabius a year ago, con-demned the announcement of the plant closing as a betrayal of government promises made to the region. His charge reflected a fear among many Socialists that the centrist policies pursued by Mr. Fabius would weaken the party's standing with one of its most important constituencies, the working

A Juggler With a Vision, Teddy Kollek Keeps Jerusalem Moving

By Thomas L. Friedman New York Times Service

ERUSALEM — The walls of Mayor Teddy Kollek's office are lined with pictures of Jerusalem in its many different historical poses. Ever the tour guide, the mayor loves to take visitors on a spin around his office, dispensing stories about the history of each of his photographs and lithographs.

But there are three in particular that hold his fancy. They hang to the right of his desk, and, in a way, they say everything one needs to know

If these pictures had titles, they might be called "Jerusalem as It Was," "Jerusalem as It Is" and "Jerusalem as It Could Be but Isn't." Jerusalem as It Was is a picture taken in June 1967, just as the walls between the Arab and Jewish sectors tumbled down. Jerusalem as It Is features a colorful panorama of the united city of today. Jerusalem as It Could Be is a picture of Berlin, taken near the wall that slices the German city in half.

By virtue of both its history and its volatile population mix, Jerusalem should be Belfast or Beirut — or Berlin with many walls instead of one. Contrary to all the cliches about it, Jerusaiem has not been a city of brotherly love and is not one today. The fact that it is not Belfast, Beirut or Berlin, and that it has been, thus far, spared their fate, is due largely to the unique character and leadership of its mayor, the man called by everyone simply "Teddy."

Yehuda Amichai, the modern Hebrew poet, said: "In a time of war, and continuing wars, Teddy has created a coexistence of a real kind. He doesn't brush it over with sappy sentimentalism about how 'the world is one.' He is not sentimental at all. He is a romantic of realism. He believes that you can stick to reality, and not paint things over, and you can fall in love with reality as it is. R ABBI David Hartman, the Israeli philosopher, notes: "Jerusalem is a city that aspires to fanaticism. This city is messianism, it's revenge, it's the music of eternity, it's the city of pilgrims and dreams. You get away from reality and come here, you get away from reality and walk where Jesus walked, or King David. And then along comes Teddy, who says, 'Look, I'll fix your sewers if you knock off the sermons.' He is the epitome of Machiavellian reality in a city which denies the whole notion of

While it is widely assumed that the greatest threat to Jerusalem comes from Arab-Israeli tensions or Sephardi-Ashkenazi class conflict. neither is the case.

The Arab-Israel conflict grabs the headlines, but a rather stable modus vivendi is operating on that front, and the upward mobility of the Sephardim and their intermarriage with the Ashkenazim have taken the edge off that issue

In fact, it is the tension between ultra-Orthodox and secular Jews that tends to be the most explosive issue on a day-to-day basis. The Orthodox population of Jerusalem, which could be defined as those Jews who would prefer to live in an exclusively religious neigh-borhood where they can observe the Sabbath in complete peace and quiet, is growing far faster than either the Moslem or the secular Jewish population and is making its influence felt ac-

Add to this the fact that what little immigration Israel is experiencing these days tends to be Orthodox Jews coming to live in Jerusalem, and the trend becomes very clear. Already, 30 per-cent of the city's population could be classified as Orthodox Jews, according to Professor Arie Shachar, director of the Hebrew University Institute of Urban and Regional Studies.

The professor added: "The proportion be-tween the Orthodox and non-Orthodox is changing all of the time in favor of the Orthodox. The problem arises from the fact that the Orthodox tend to live separately." "Before 1967 most of the Orthodox lived in the Mes Shearim neighborhood, near the border with Jordan," Mr. Shachar said. "It was an isolated dead end, and they could live there however they wanted without disturbing anyone else. But when the border was swept away in 1967 and new neighborhoods were built, the religious felt engulfed. New roads were cut through their communities and suddenly a hidden conflict came out in the open."

The conflict has taken many forms, from stone-throwing at cars violating the Sabbath to Ashkenazi, in a town where the majority are attempts to block the building of mixed swimming pools or a soccer stadium where "Hellenistic games" would be played on Saturday, to attempts to force all public institutions, even aims, to close on the Sabbath.

send their children to public religious schools. Those who wear velvet yarmulkas or hats and are bearded are more Orthodox, less nationalistic; and they send their children to private religious schools (which also are funded by the state). Finally, there are the ultra-Orthodox Haredim who wear black hats over long, curling sideburns and do not recognize the secular state

What happened in Har Nof was that the religious families got together and formed a self-rule council, dominated by the most Orthodox elements, said Mrs. Kaminker. One of the council's first acts was to write the municipality and ask that all the roads in the neighborhood be closed to traffic on the Sabbath, because it was disturbing their day of rest. Mrs. Kaminker said: "The 40 or so secular families in the neighborhood got wind of the letter and made an alliance with the knitted yarmulkas, who also did not want the roads closed, against the velvet yarmulkas and the black hats. They wrote to the city and said, 'Keep the roads open.' We told them all, 'Look, why don't you all get together and work it out amongst yourselves?"

He is a pragmatist who tries to operate within the political limits of his environment; he is an empire builder with a human touch." Mr. Nusseibeh added, "I like him immensely personally, and I disagree with everything he presents politically."

Besides his unique personality, another attri-bute that may have enabled Teddy to march to the beat of his own drum has been his ability to raise money on his own through the Jerusalem Foundation, the nonprofit philanthropic organization established in 1966 to provide funds for community centers, plays, libraries, education programs, clinics and parks which the city treasury could not afford. Closing her file of papers on Har Nof, she sighed aloud: "How do we live in this city? How mind-set of many of the city's people is still one of integrant fantacy in which in the end, their mind-set of many of the city's people is still one of utopian fantasy in which, in the end, their vision triumphs over all others and the city becomes theirs. In the long run, unless a pluralistic sensibility takes hold, unless Jerusalemites learn to see the dignity of limits, then with Teddy's passing, said Rabbi David Hartman, "will eventually come an explosion of fantasy which will wash this city with blood."

Teddy is not so sure, or maybe not so pessi mistic. It is just not his style. He dismisses a lot of this philosophizing with a flick of the Cuban cigar in his hand. He is, after all, a builder, impatient. He doubts that the day will ever come when the entire crazy quilt of his constituency will learn to love limits and not just respect

A Yen for Din: Most Japanese Coexist With Cacophony

By John Burgess Washington Post Service

AGOYA, Japan — It is 21 years since Tomoyo Hanabusa enjoyed peace and quiet in her tiny wooden home in this thriving industrial city west of Tokyo.

Twenty feet (six meters) from her living room stands a concrete trestle that since 1964 has carried Japan's builet trains at speeds of up to 120 miles (193 kilometers) an hour. They begin passing her home at 6:45 A.M. and run until a few minutes after 11 P.M. - more than 300 times a day.

"When I'm downstairs in the kitchen, it's like getting hit by an earthquake every five min-utes," she said. Flowerpots wobble and conversation stops.

After eight seconds, another blue and white bullet has hurtled out of sight and things are quiet for a few minutes.

Mrs. Hanabusa is angry about the noise and she is fighting back, but that makes her unusual in Japan. Ten years ago she joined with several hundred neighbors to sue the state-owned Japanese National Railways. Most of them won

Tokyo recently has enacted a law that sets specific limits on the times and volume levels for karaoke playing.

Every now and then, frustration with the noise level leads directly to violence. In 1974, a man murdered a neighbor and her two daugh-ters after he became enraged over piano practice by the girls. More recently, a motorcyclist was killed in Tokyo when he struck a line strung between two trees. The police believe it was someone angry over motorcycle gangs using the street for joyriding.

> HEY were enacted as part of a national backlash against all kinds of pollution in the early 1970s following the Minamata City mercury poisonings and other celebrated cases. The government has spent millions erecting sound barriers along highways and fitting houses with double windows along the bullet train lines, Mrs. Hanabusa's included.

Those who live next to ordinary railroads, however, receive no government assistance be-cause, in the words of one official, "We'd have to pay for half the houses in Japan."

Declining complaints show that the Japanese government appears to have made important progress against some types of industrial noise. Officials are trying to relocate night landing practice by U.S. jets, following long-standing complaints and legal action from people living around the Atsugi Air Base near Tokyo. But other fields need attention. A recent government survey, for instance, found that only two of 17 airports included in the study were meeting aviation noise standards set in 1973.

The government sometimes fails to move against citizen noisemakers on the ground that such action might violate the public interest. For instance, reining in the sound trucks of Tokyo could be considered a curtailment of free speech, the police said.

Likewise, the court that rejected the demand by Mrs. Hanabusa and her fellow plaintiffs held that slowing the trains for them would mean slowing the trains for 50 other neighborhoods along the lines. That, it was argued, would disrupt Japan's transportation network.

Moreover a plot entirely dependent on one character playing twins requires some nifty backstage trickery and that too is hard to achieve in the middle of a park, which may well be why the otherwise admirable Patrick Ryccart makes an only minimal distinction between the two contrasted characters he is supposed to be playing.

Margaretta Scott is in cascading form as the old aunt, but Sarah Finch lacks the sense of budding stardom that is needed for the ballerina, and the pace of Conville's production is often not so much slow as stopped. NYSE Prices Fall on Rate Fears

But he said without some concrete develop-ments on curting the federal budget deficit or some signs that an economic pickup is more than "an economist's pipedream," the market would settle into a "boring and frustrating trad-ing range in the 1,250 to 1,350 area." NEW YORK — Fear of rising interest rates sent prices on the New York Stock Exchange into their sharpest decline in a year and a half.

The Dow Jones industrial average plunged 21.73 to 1,325.16, the sharpest one-day loss since Feb. 8, 1984. The Dow transportation average plummeted 13.23 to 681.41, the biggest drop in nearly a year.

Declines outnumbered advances by a 3-1 ratio. Volume totaled 102.9 million shares, up from 79.6 million on Monday.

The market opened mixed and drifted lower until it became apparent that bidding for the Treasury's new securities had been "cautious." Stocks then moved lower on the expectation that to attract buyers, yields on the 10- and 30-year securities being sold this week would have to rise. The market's failure to retain support at the 1,340 level triggered a number of sell programs at major brokerage houses, sending the market into its skid.

"The 1,340 area on the Dow was just a temporary resting period for the sellers before we went lower," said Alfred Goldman of A.G. Edwards, St. Louis. "Aggressive market participants should be positioned for a test of support between 1,280 and 1,300," he said.

Peter Furniss of Drexel Burnham Lambert said the market's tepid response to the budget compromise was the "handwriting on the wall" for the market's move down. Mr. Goldman forecast the market would move to the 1,280-1,300 area on the Dow over the next two to three weeks before attempting a late summer rally.

Beatrice Cos. followed, tacking on % to 32% as it continued its climb following the ousting of its chairman, James L. DutL Among airlines, Pan American World Air ways finished unchanged at 7 in active trading. Other airlines fell. U.S., European Executives Turn to Arts for Guidance

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ARIS - Some U.S. corporations are sending executives to liberal courses in art, music, philosophy or politics on company time and money. For example, at Hartwick College, Oneonta, New York, John K. Clemens teaches management by drawing examples from the classics, such as Plato's Republic or Homer's Iliad.

He attended an IMI seminar.

A LIBERAL arts curriculum for executives is offered by the Salzburg Seminar in Austria. This year, the seminar includes a course in contemporary American literature, telecommunications, trade policies and U.S.-European relations. Created by three Harvard professors in 1947, the seminar draws 450 persons to its 10 annual sessions. But only a third are corporate managers. The rest are academics and civil servants.

"We have to work at persnading European corporations to send their people here. They wonder why they should send executives here rather than to more technical institutions," says Thomas B. Ragle, director of the Salzburg Seminar. "We try to bring in midcareer executives who will be in leadership posi-

IBM Europe and the Kreditanstalt für Wiederaufban, a Frankfurt-based development bank that finances West German investments and exports to developing countries, send their executives to courses that have some relevance to their businesses. They find it hard to justify a seminar's cost — one week in Salzburg costs $1,000 — if it has no immediate benefit for the company.

The course they attend should have some bearing on our work," says Konrad Busse, a Kreditanstalt adviser who has sent staff to the seminar for the past 14 years. "The point is not the money, it's the time. To spare one of our best people for a session of up to four weeks is not easy."

British Petroleum Co. PLC sends one or two of its legal executives to the Salzberg Seminar's course on U.S. law and legal institutions because of BP's growing business involvement in the United States. "We don't send our executives to get a better appreciation of opera and the arts. We believe that the education process up to the age of 21 takes care of that," says Roger Often, director of human resources at BP in London.

Lloyd's Members Fail Test

Record Number Called Insolvent

By Bob Hagerty
International Herald Tribune
LONDON — Lloyd's of London said Tuesday that a record number of its members failed to pass their unnual solvency test. The high failure rate reflects huge losses facing some members of the insurance exchange and alle-gations that part of the losses arose through fraud. Ian Hay Davison, chief executive of Lloyd's, said the 300-year-old exchange was prepared to use its reserves if necessary to cover the liabilities of the distressed mem-

"Lloyd's solvency is as impreg-nable as it ever was," be asserted at a news conference.

Lloyd's said 517 of its 26,000 members had failed to submit properly audited solvency certificates, required once a year to show that members can cover any losses on insurance underwritten in their

The assets pledged to Lloyd's by these members, or "names," fell short of projected losses by a total of £65.5 million ($88.4 million).

A year ago, 120 members failed the test, but about two-thirds of those managed to pass before year-end. Mr. Davison cautioned that the percentage of members who ul-timately pass this year would not necessarily be so high.

W. German Biotech a Late Starter

But Concerns Are Confident of Long-Term Role

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribune
FRANKFURT — Despite its heavyweight status in the world's chemical and pharmaceutical in-dustries, West Germany has yet to make its muscle felt in the promising arena of biotechnolo-

Being a late starter, however, has failed to unleash a sense of panic,

Although start-up companies in the United States and Japan have been quicker to realize the industrial potential of genetic-engineering breakthroughs, ex-ecutives of West German chemical giants say that they are confident that the market will be long in maturing, allowing them to bring their financial clout and broad technical expertise to bear.

"At Hoechst, there's not much talk about short-term investment in biotech," said Klaus Weissermel, Hoechst's chief of research. "Instead, we think in terms of a long-range program under what we call 'hi-chem.' "

Robert Fildes, president of Cetus Co., the first major genetic-engineering company to emerge in the United States, said big West German and other European chemical groups "tultiropean chemical groups "ultimately can be extremely competitive - it's just a matter of time. They've got the money to put things together."

In the meantime, one of the best kept secrets among Germany's chemical triumvirate— Hoechst AG, Bayer AG and BASF AG— is who has been talking to whom in the United States, as West German companies scramble to establish research and licensing agreements with American biotech companies that currently have a competitive edge.

"We're talking with a lot of American biotech companies, but I won't say with whom or about which products," said one BASF executive, echoing the

Because of a lengthy process for regulatory approval, com-bined with a market that will take time to define, Hoechst's Mr. Weissermel said major sinancial returns on investment in biotech cannot be expected until the 1990s and beyond.

The second most-promising growth market, the agriculabout $8 billion by the turn of the century, SRI predicts. Luther H. Smithson, head of SRI's biotechnology division, said a British biotech group, Celltech, has a jump on its European competition, having emerged five years ago — well before independent biotech ventures perked up in West Germany, France and elsewhere in the past two years.

He said Switzerland, with its strong pharmaceutical industry, will run head-to-head with West Germany in the race to corner a segment of the biotech market. while France will need to create a larger pool of its own genetic engineers working in industry if it is to stay competitive. "Our strength is that, independent of cyclical swings in the economy, we are in a position to invest steadily," Mr. Weissermel said. Hoechst's biotech investment is focused on both bloodrelated pharmaceutical products and crop-protection agents. Hoechst, one of the world's largest pharmaceutical concerns, is investing 152 million Deutsche marks ($53.9 million) this year in 125 million DM in 1984. Hoechst's investment, Mr. Weis-(Continued on Page 13, Col. 6)

BankAmerica Cuts Dividend By Nearly Half

merica Corp. has reduced its quarterly dividend on its common stock to 20 cents a share from 38 cents, marking its first decrease since

The corporation posted a second-quarter loss of $338 million. The loss, primarily caused by a huge increase in its reserves for bad loans, was one of the largest ever for a U.S. financial company.

BankAmerica, the second-larg-

The dividend reduction was recommended by management and approved by the board of directors during a meeting late on Monday attended by H. Joe Selby, acting U.S. comptroller of the currency. The cut was announced following the nine-hour board meeting.

Mr. Selby's office recently completed a four-month examination of Bank of America. The findings of the audit were presented to the board but details were not avail-

It is the company's first com-mon-stock dividend decrease since 1932, a BankAmerica spokesman

"We are keenly aware that a re-duction in the dividend will be difficult for many of our shareholders, and consequently this was a very hard decision for us," said Samuel H. Armacost, president and chief executive officer.

The company had previously been paying 38 cents a share since

Mr. Armacost said the reduction showed that key parts of the U.S. economy, which have a major impact on the corporation's loan port-folio, "remain under considerable stress and are responding unevenly to the improvement in general eco-nomic conditions."

He added that the dividend reduction is "one of a number of ongoing actions focused on maximizing the corporation's ability to generate profitable growth and products for customers."

The other actions include "the sale of assets that no long fit the corporate strategy, continued reductions in the growth of operating expenses and the vigorous pursuit of new revenue opportunities," Mr.

Dividends on the corporation's common shares will be paid on Aug. 30 to shareholders of record Aug. 15. Preferred dividends will be paid on Aug. 31, also to share-holders of record Aug. 15.

According to the IMF, if the def-icit is not eliminated, inflation will break through the price control system and destroy the economic recovery. Since March, when the new government took office, prices have increased at an average monthly rate of 8 percent, compared with 12 percent a month in the first three months of the year.

The government's target for internal borrowing this year was set at 27 trillion cruzeiros ($4.18 bil-lion). Through July, it borrowed 20 trillion cruzeros, so spending must be reduced to avoid the moneysupply increases that would drive inflation over the planned level of about 200 percent this year. Last year it was 227 percent.

Government economic planners argue that a spending cutback would stille growth and reduce tax revenues, deepening the liscal deli-

Reuters
FRANKFURT --- West Germany's lagging consumer demand appears ready for a strong rebound in coming months, a move that should offset a possible decline in export earnings, which have been fuelling the nation's economic growth, according to many economists.

The softer dollar could cut export growth to around 5.5 percent

But a falling rate of industrial sis to wage increases from shorter working hours should boost deyear, they said.

According to Helmut Henschel. an economist for Westdeutsche Landesbank Girozentrale, consumer spending will get a major boost next year from a planned tax cut of 10 billion Deutsche marks ($3.5 bil-

"These are cuts across the board," he said. "The economic outlook is for inflation to stay low, so there will be a considerable boost to real incomes."

He added: "The building sector, which helped drag gross national product growth down to a decline of a real 1.0 percent in the 1985 first quarter, should be aided by government measures to boost urban renewal investment and depreciation incentives to increase industrial

Although a lower dollar will moderate West German export performance, it will make imports cheaper, economists note. Since West Germany draws heavily on the U.S. market for consumer goods, this should boost the retailng sector.

In a recent study, Hessische Landesbank Girozentrale predicted that a softer dollar would not necessarily harm export results since German companies had not fully used the last few months to realize additional profits amid the dollar surge.

THE EUROMARKETS Market Ends Firmer Ahead of U.S. Auction

LONDON - The Eurobond market generally ended firmer ahead of the auction late Tuesday of $8.5 billion of three-year notes by the U.S. Treasury, which opens its $21.75-billion quarterly refund-

Most dealers expected the auction to attract a fair amount of interest, although they were not prepared to predict the outcome. Most dollar straights ended with pairts of ¼ to ½ point from Monday's close, although retail interest was again minimal.

Dealers said that despite duli rading in the secondary market, a couple of new dollar-straight issues were launched. These both apseared to be aimed at Japanese

Icahn Raises TWA Stake to 40.6%

WASHINGTON - Carl C. Icahm, the New York investor, disclosed Tuesday that he has raised his interest in Trans World Airlines Inc. to 13.9 million shares, or 40.6 percent of the total outstanding, from the 35-percent stake he had amassed earlier.

In a filing with the U.S. Securi-ties and Exchange Commission, Mr. icahn said he bought 2,688,000 additional shares between July 12 and Aug. 5 for $59.8 million, or an indicated average price of $22.25 a Analysts said the disclosure, which comes one day after Mr. icahn announced a new $24-ashare bid for TWA, raises doubts about the ability of Texas Air Corp. to consummate a previously announced merger with TWA.

Mr. Icahn's latest offer, for $19.50 a share cash and $4.50 in preferred paper, is a nominal $1-ashare higher than the bid by Texas Air Corp. which was accept TWA on June 13 after Mr. Icahn ing Corp.-Dans & Co. GmbH. an made his initial offer to buy the Carrier.

Ford Discusses Venture in China

BEDING - Ford Motor Co. is holding exploratory talks with China on setting up a joint venture to manufacture light vehicles, the vice president of the U.S. automaker, Lindsey Halstead, said Tuesday.

Mr. Halstead, visiting China at the invitation of the China Antomolive Industry Corp., met Monday with Deputy Prime Minister Wan Li, the Xinhua news agency said.

China Automotive would be the Chinese partner in any jointventure agreement, according to the agency. The venture would involve introducing the latest technology to China, it added. "We are holding very exploratory talks this time and expect to have many more discussions before we can make a decision," Mr. Halstead Japanese automakers are also talking with the Chinese about the same joint venture, Western business sources said.

Through 1985 still pales in comparison to cooperative efforts with Genenwhat he estimated will be $1 billion in expenditures in the United States and to the $300 million in spending he projected for Japan.

Investing millions of marks, moreover, is not going to overcome what Mr. Weissermel and others described as a "serious shortage of highly qualified scientists" in biotechnology and more specifically, genetic engineering, in West Ger-

Hoechst is one of the few West German companies to have made a direct investment in the U.S. biotechnology industry. In 1981, it signed a 10-year research contract on molecular biology, valued at about $60 million, with a prominent biotechnologist, Howard Goodman, of Boston's Massachusetts General Hospital

The other notable exception came in March when Boehringer Ingelheim Zentrale GmbH. a smaller West German pharmaceu-ticals group, paid $40 million for a percent stake in San Franciscobased Genentech Inc., one of the oldest and largest biotech companies in the United States. Franz Waldeck, head of research at Boehringer, said German companies may become more interested in buying into U.S. companies in anticipation of a potential shakeout among those start-up biotech companies. Some of these companies are struggling to meet the heavy costs involved in waiting the five to seven years it takes for U.S. regulatory approval of gene-spliced products.

Boehringer hopes to introduce TPA, a genetically engineered product designed to dissolve blood clots during heart attacks, in Europe by 1987.

The annual market for TPA, Bochringer executives estimate, could be well over 1 billion DM.

The company also has high expectations to market in 1987 again, in conjunction with Genentech — gamma-type interferon, a gene-spliced agent used for com-bating viruses and, it is hoped, cancer tumors

Boehringer last month established a joint-venture cancer-research center with Genentech in Vienna and will raise outlays for biotech programs by 60 percent this year to 40 million DM. Next year, Mr. Waldeck said, spending on biotech is to increase to 60 million-65 million DM

In addition to nearly 1 billion DM of government support for biotech planned during the next four years, most major West German chemical and pharmaceutical companies are stepping up their own spending on in-house research and development. They are also expanding joint-ventures with market leaders in the United States and Japan, as well as licensing agreements with companies abroad

Another brake on biotech developments here, Mr. Smithson and others pointed out, has been the reluctance of biologists and generic-engineers in academe to start up their own biotechnology-venture

The West German technology minister, Heinz Riesenhuber, said in an interview that start-up biotech companies were virtually nonexistent until early last year. Today, there are about 10 West German genetic-engineering companies, most of them clustered around four new state-supported basic research centers in Heidelberg, Munich, Cologne and Berlin.

WHAT IS REMEMBERED

By Alice B. Toklas. $9.50, paperback; 224 pages. North Point Press, 850 Talbot Avenue, Berkeley, Calif. 94706.

OU WON'T won't fall all in a heap over differences between what is remembered by Alice R. Toklas and what is remembered about her. No major surprises, no intimate revelations here, nothing to tear up the picture of the strange-looking woman whose life was almost totally defined by its association with another's. For apart from her celebrated cookbook — most widely popularized, by that "haschich" recipe — Alice wasn't very apart.

As Gertrode Stein's "secretary-companion" for nearly 40 years, she was typist ("My fingers were adapted only to Gertrade's work"), cook, gardener and barrier against people that Stein did not wish to see. She found vegetables "a passion" and "talked to the wives of geniuses while Stein talked to genineses themselves: Pi-casso or Henningway or Sherwood Anderson. casso or Hemingway of Sherwood Annerson.

Even that first occasion of reflected glory,
"The Autobiography of Alice B. Toklas" by Gertrude Stein, was, of course, Stein's vehicle for examining Stein. And while "What Is Remembered," originally published in 1963 and out of print for 10 years, is not a case of Toklas

Toklas and best of the course, a miguse trying to get back some of her own, a unique voice comes through.

M. F. K. Fisher, in her foreword to the latest edition of "The Cookbook," says that Toklas was probably one of the ugliest people anyone had ever seen, to draw or photograph." Yet people reported "that when this small, ugly woman was in a room, they were keenly aware of her, before they ever recognized her as Toldas. She seemed to send out waves of inaudible sound, like bells clanging somewhere in another space than ours." A friend of Fisher's even went so far as to say that Toklas's "strong black mustache made other faces look mude.

Toklas herself makes no reference to her mustache or her looks, though she is quite vocal about everybody else's. (Who but Alice B. Tokies would say that Edith Sitwell had "the most beautiful nose any woman had"?) Toklas is wry and furny and deliciously bitchy: "Clive Bell was in those days witty and amusing before he became pretentious.

The most limitious paragraph tells of Tokias walking into a room and first meeting it woman who would become her life. "It was Gertrade Stein who held my complete after tion, as she did for all the many years I kne her until her death, and all these empty on since then. She was a golden brown present burned by the Tuscan sun. . . . She wore large round coral brooch and when she talks very little, or laughed, a good deal, I thougher voice came from this brooch."

I wish Toklas had told us more about the relationship — or, more to the point, about how she felt about herself within the relation ship. (For life after Stein died, there is "Stron On Alone," published three years before To las's death in 1976.) But this straightforwar little memoir did not promise everything; on what was remembered.

Russians Set N. America Hockey Tour MOSCOW (AP) - The Central Army hockey team will tour North America in December and January for six games against National Hockey League teams, Tass reported Tuesday.

The army team, which has produced many of the Soviet Union's best national players, will begin its series against Los Angeles on Dec. 26, followed by games against Edmonton (Dec. 28), Calgary (Dec. 29), Montreal (Dec. 31), St. Louis (Jan. 2) and Minnesota (Jan. 4).

Egypt Readmitted to Pan-Arab Games

RABAT. Morocco (AP) — The general assembly of the Arab Sports Union, the organizing body of the Pan-Arab Games, has voted to readmit Egypt. In Monday's 15-1 balloting, only Syria voted against; four other nations. Libya, Tunisia, Algeria and South Yernen, abstained. The vote did not affect the Pan-Arab Games currently in progress in Morocco.

Egypt was excluded from the union in 1979, following its expulsion from the Arab League for signing the Camp David peace agreements with Israel. The union normally includes all members of the Arab League.

USFL Players Union Sues Gunslingers SAN ANTONIO, Texas (UPI) — The United States Football League Players Association filed suit Monday against the San Antonio Gunslingers for the more than $550,000 owed the team's former players for the last four games of this season.

The 46 players were waived July 22, when owner Clinton Manges failed to meet an arbitrator's deadline for making good on the missed two payrolls in June. The players were waived hours before they would have automatically become free agents under grievance procedures.

Portrait of a Painter

By Russell Baker

NFW YORK — Writers have to do something besides write, or he-men will think they are sissies. This is why Ernest Heming-way went around shooting things and attending wars. There are many other famous examples.

George Plimpton, for instance. He tries to play the game with pro-lessional athletes. Woody Allen makes movies, David Halberstam rows, John Irving wrestles. Or used to wrestle. Norman Mailer has run for mayor of New York, made a movie, got arrested for a cause.

My career as a writer was gravely hampered by my refusal to develop a sideline. When I took up the typewriter, I scoffed at the writing men of action. Could one imagin Heary James plodding around Africa, in the Hemingway mode, shooting poor inoffensive beasts? Marcel Proust, I pointed out, had written profusely without playing quarterback for the Detroit Lions or pitching to Willie Mays. And what about Charles Dickens? He would have been outraged if told he ought to take up rowing, Or wrestle, or run for mayor becanse he-men would think him a pantywaist if he just sat around dribbling ink.

What was good enough for James, Proust and Dickens was good enough for me. I sat around dribbling ink.
And failed, of course.

He-men would not buy my books. If they wanted to read books written by somebody who didn't sweat and struggle at irrelevant sideline activities, he-men said, they could read books by

So my market was taken over by Fran Lebowitz, Jane Austen and Edith Wharton, whose writings were lean, muscular and energetic because they did not have to exhaust themselves going on safaris, making movies, rowing, wrestling, pitching to Willie Mays or running

I acknowledged the way of the world and took up a virile sideline. There was consternation in the house the day I rose from my typewriter, strode into the parlor and, with muscles buckling under the weight, spilled a gallon of white alkyd primer on the Aubusson rug.

Yes, I had decided to take up house-painting.

That was many years ago. Now the years spent scraping paint, puttying wall cracks, removing wallpaper and smelling like paint thinner at elegant writers' conferences have given my writing a manly weight, which, if developed, might yet place me among the great authors.

This summer — if I may share a confidence — I intend to take on Henry James. His "Portrait of a Lady" was probably good enough in its time, but does America these days want to read a sexist novel about women in hoop skirts?

This was the question I asked myself one day while removing green and blue polka-dot wallpaper from a second-floor bedroom in a house I had bought so I would have something to paint between books.

As soon as I asked it, I realized that the great novel waiting to be written would have to be titled 'Portrait of a Woman." And while I scraped hard at a particularly obdurate piece of wallpaper, I de-bated whether it should bear the subtitle "Without No Clothes On." Four weeks have passed since that first conversation with myself and, believe me, getting off that polka-dot wallpaper was not easy. It had a vinyl finish that refused to soak up the hot water applied to it, and I finally had to go after it with a rotary sander. After that the walls had to be rubbed with steel wool, but the sander had chewed up the plaster so badly that — Where was I? Yes, "Portrait of a Woman," possibly subtitled "Without No Clothes On," provided America seems ready for a great satirical novel. I have been up on the ladder all day trying to save the wall with patching plaster, and wondering if a better title wouldn't be "Portrait of a Gentleman," possibly subtitled "Without No Pants On," and I'm now too tired to make great artistic decisions. That's the trouble with housepainting. By the time you finish ashing the brushes, you're too exhausted to sit down at the typewrit-er. And if you sit down anyhow, the writing comes out exhausted and pointless. Like this.

Where was I ---? Well, at least they can't call me sissy boy.'

Fighting Wildfires With Technology

By Jim Robbins New York Times Service

TELENA, Montana — For In more than a week, opaque columns of smoke rose into the sky at Hellgate Canyon, near Missoula. As darkness gathered, dozens of wind-driven blazes flickered in the thickly forested mountains.

Crews struggled to dig a line around the 1,000-acre (400-hectare) fire. Bombers dropped loads of fire-retardant slurry before the flames, leaving dusty red streaks on the ground.

Each day that week in the middle of July, decisions had to be made on how to fight the fire and what its course might be. In this case, the fire boss and crews had the assistance of a U.S. Forest Service computer program called

The system cannot cover all possibilities; shifting winds in Hellgate Canyon undid the computer's projection of the fire's course. Last year on a 27,000-agre blaze in North Hills near Helena. however, a computer successfully predicted that the fire would burn itself out and that 8 miles (13 kilometers) of new fire line would not be needed.

That projection is estimated to have saved $670,000 in labor and materials. And it meant that firefighters did not have to risk their lives dieging a line.

Forest fires in the West earlier this summer killed three persons, destroyed 200 homes and caused more than $60 million in damage. At the peak of the season, the Forest Service, U.S. Bureau of Land Management and state forest agencies were spending $8.6 million a day fighting fires nationwide. The Interagency Fire Center in Boise, Idaho, said more than a million acres had burned this year in the West.

Until 1940, forest fires were fought by people who hiked into a fire. Directed by radio from aircraft, they used shovels and poleaxes. Their mission was the same as it is now: to dig a trench around the fire to contain it.

area and parachuted in to get an early assessment of the blaze.

(above) charts potential fire hazards: forestry officials used calculators to predict movements of blazes and a computer (Dellora Gauger, right, with printouts) to monitor lightning strikes.

technology developed for other uses, including the military. In-frared cameras, for example, are used over fires to detect hot spots and to get a picture of the perimeter of the fire despite smoke.

Now, as in many other fields, computers have taken a big role in making decisions.

To gather data, federal agencies have developed devices that can detect more than 95 percent of all lightning strikes in 1 Western states. Together with computer programs and portable weather stations, the system is called the Initial Attack Management System. The $7-million network began operation this year at the Interagency Fire Center.

Four categories of data are needed: the type of fuel, whether (pine needles, large branches, In 1940 firefighters began to be grass, standing trees), the amount flown with equipment to the fire of moisture in living and dead plants, the angle of slope and the wind speed. Helicopters fly ahead in the early 1970s Forest Ser-vice researchers began to apply examine the terrain.

Given these, the computer plots how quickly, how far and in what direction the fire will spread, how hot it will be, the length of the flames and how long it will take to contain the fire.

In the evening the firefighters estimate what each fire will do during the heat of the day, said Richard Rothermal, a research scientist in the Northern Forest Fire Laboratory in Helena, and they plan their suppression strat-egy accordingly. If the flame length, for example, is expected to be more than 4 feet (1.2 meters), alternatives must be found to digging fire lines; flames long-er than four feet are considered

For several years the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and the Interagency Fire Center have been using satellites to map 11 Western states by terrain and moisture content. The maps have been sent to ning Detection System works from this base of information. Foresters used to rely on lookout towers on ridgetops and hills. Now 32 remote sensors report lightning strikes.

"We can detect 95 to 99 percent of all lightning," said Steven German, program manager for the system. When a large number of strikes hits an area, especially one that has been mapped as par-ticularly dry, a plane is sent out. It is estimated that 75 percent of the fires in the West are caused by lightning, so the system is expected to produce a dramatic reduction in the number of fires that become major problems.

Despite the advances of technology, though, fire lines are still dug by hand. "We've tried a lot of machines," said Bill McCleese. the Forest Service's assistant director for fire management in Washington. "But with the kind regional offices of the land man-agement agencies around the West, and the Automatic Light-ing with a shovel."

Rock Hudson has approved a plan to set up a foundation to fight acquired immune deficiency syndrome in his name, a spokesman says. Hudson, who was visited at UCLA Medical Center in Los Angeles by Elizabeth Taylor, "is gain-ing strength and is in good spirits" but is still in fair condition, the hospital said in a statement. Taylor, one of the organizers of a gala benefit planned for Sept. 19 to raise money for research into AIDS, starred with Hadson in the 1956 movie "Giant." for which the actor Airlines flight attendant, on Tues-received an Academy Award nomiday, his 63d birthday. Shen Ding, who was 12 when she pre-sented the bouquet in the Great Hall of the People in Beijing, said: "All this, my marriage, none of a could have happened without his visit." she and Jim Buder, 32, met in Beijing last September when Butler, who works for Detroitbased Burroughs Corp., spent three months installing computers for a Chinese company. They married two months ago and live in a Detroit suburb.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain and her husband, Denis, have signed a contract to buy a house in the high-security Dulwich Gate development in southern London, according to David Pretty, managing director of Barratt Central Landon Ltd. The development is bounded by a high brick wall and equipped with elec-trically operated entrance gates and closed-circuit television cameras. Pretty refused to give the prace but said the 23 houses in the development ranged from £380,000 to £475,000 (about $515,000 to $645,000).

Franz Josef Strauss, who turns 70 next month, has acquired a jet pilot's heense. Munich newspapers reported that the Bavarian state prime minister, who has flown propeller planes since 1968, made a perfect landing in a twin-engine Cessna Citation to pass his jet test with flying colors. He said he would use the Cessna for quick trips to Bosto. Strauss's Christian Social Union is part of the Bonn coalition but he spends most of his time in Bayaria.
